

Argentine power distribution box and cable manufacturer

AI Overview

Key Argentine manufacturers of power distribution boxes and electrical cables include Marlew, Conductores RG, Zoloda, and Myselec, all offering certified, high-quality products for industrial, energy, and telecommunications sectors.

Leading Manufacturers

Marlew is a prominent Argentine company with over 50 years of experience in manufacturing electrical conductors and low-voltage cables. They serve industries such as Oil & Gas, energy generation, mining, and infrastructure, providing customized solutions with international certifications and technical support throughout project lifecycles.

Conductores RG S.R.L. specializes in electrical and telecommunications conductors. Established in 1984, the company emphasizes high technology and quality, producing cables under national and international standards. Their modern facilities include advanced laboratories for testing and quality control, ensuring reliable products for energy and telecom companies across Latin America.

Zoloda manufactures electrical distribution and industrial control products, including terminal blocks, cable trunking, and coated steel flexible conduits. They maintain ISO 9001:2015 certification and supply both domestic and offshore markets, participating in sectors like oil, naval, aviation, and automotive projects.

Myselec focuses on low, medium, and high voltage electrical distribution products. They provide cable protection solutions and tools for stripping insulation, supporting energy distribution networks and industrial applications.

Market Overview

Argentina's electrical equipment sector is robust, producing cables, wiring harnesses, switchgear, transformers, and distribution systems. Manufacturers often comply with IEC standards and provide type-tested products, which are essential for utility and industrial procurement. The market is influenced by infrastructure projects, renewa...
