

Flange Coupler Fiber Optic

AI Overview

A fiber optic flange coupler is a precision component that aligns and connects fiber optic cables or connectors, enabling efficient light transmission between fibers or between fibers and optical devices.

Overview A fiber optic flange coupler (also called a fiber optic adapter or docking component) serves as a mechanical interface to connect two fiber optic connectors, such as FC, SC, ST, or LC types, ensuring precise alignment and minimal insertion loss during light transmission. These couplers are widely used in optical communication systems, instrumentation, patch panels, and laboratory setups.

Types and Compatibility Flange couplers come in various designs to accommodate different connector types and mounting systems:

- Threaded Flanges: Include SM05, SM1, and C-Mount threaded options, allowing integration with standard optical mounts or free-space optical components.
- Bulkhead Couplers: Installed directly in enclosures or devices to provide a fixed connection point for fiber cables.
- Hybrid Couplers: Enable connections between different connector types, e.g., LC to SC.
- Angle-Polished Couplers: Designed for low-loss, high-precision applications, such as DWDM systems.

Most flange couplers feature alignment keys (typically 2.0 mm narrow or 2.2 mm wide) to ensure proper orientation of FC/PC or FC/APC connectors, reducing insertion loss and back reflections.

Materials and Construction High-quality flange couplers are often made from 304 stainless steel, which is precision-machined, demagnetized, and surface-treated to resist corrosion and reduce ambient light interference. Some couplers include ceramic sleeves for precise fiber alignment, enhancing signal integrity.

Applications Fiber optic flange couplers are used for:

- Coupling single-mode and multi-mode fibers in laboratory or industrial optical setups.
- Patch panels and distribution frames (ODF) to connect multiple fiber cables efficiently.
- Optical instrumentation where precise alignment and low insertion loss are critical.
- Specialized optical systems such as WDM, TAP, or high-power fiber network...
