

What are the divisions of Georgia

AI Overview

Georgia is divided into two autonomous republics, nine regions, and 69 municipalities, including five self-governing cities. Autonomous Republics Georgia has two autonomous republics: Adjara and Abkhazia. Adjara is fully under Georgian control, while Abkhazia is outside Georgia's effective control due to ongoing territorial disputes. Abkhazia's government operates in exile in Tbilisi, and the region is considered occupied territory by Georgia, though it is recognized as independent by Russia and a few other UN member states. Regions (Mkhare) Outside the autonomous republics and Tbilisi, Georgia is provisionally divided into nine regions: Guria, Imereti, Kakheti, Kvemo Kartli, Mtskheta-Mtianeti, Racha-Lechkhumi, and Kvemo Svaneti, Samegrelo-Zemo Svaneti, Samtskhe-Javakheti, Shida Kartli. These regions group multiple municipalities for administrative purposes. Municipalities Georgia has a total of 69 municipalities, which include: 5 self-governing cities: Tbilisi (the capital), Batumi, Kutaisi, Rustavi, and Poti; 64 municipalities consisting of urban and rural settlements, organized into administrative communities called temi. Tbilisi Districts The capital city, Tbilisi, is further divided into 10 districts (raioni) for local governance. Summary Georgia's administrative structure is hierarchical: Autonomous republics (Adjara, Abkhazia) Regions (mkhare) for municipalities outside autonomous areas Municipalities (urban and rural) Districts within major cities like Tbilisi This structure supports governance, population management, and regional planning, while also reflecting historical and political complexities, particularly in areas like Abkhazia and South Ossetia.
